

Why not commemorate the day on which the senate voted down the treaty without reservations as "Boost America Day?"

But speaking of holidays there are getting to be so many of them that pretty soon the president and governor will have to reverse the custom and proclaim the working days.

The coal shortage is not altogether bad. It may force the cabaret habitués to dress warmer.

AMERICA HELPS CHINESE BANKS

(Correspondence Associated Press)
TOKIO, Nov. 6.—Referring to the recent arrangement of an American-Chinese joint banking corporation with a capital of $10,000,000, the Kokusai News agency says that this enterprise may be regarded as foreshadowing the opening of economic activity by the United States in a post-war commercial and industrial campaign for China.

It adds: "It is obvious that with the aid of the American financiers the northern military group of China will be enabled to carry out a policy favorable to their interests in the future, which will eventually affect the interests of the southern group. There is no doubt that the hand-shaking of the American and Chinese bankers in the establishment of an American-Chinese bank lays the foundation for joint operations of American and Chinese capitalists in the economic development of China in the future, a matter which calls for keen attention of Japanese business men who are closely interested in the economic development of China."

MRS. MAESTRETTI'S RECOVERY IS SLOW

District Attorney A. J. Maestretti arrived home Thursday evening after spending some time in Oakland, Calif., where Mrs. Maestretti is under medical treatment. He says that Mrs. Maestretti is not recovering from the ailment for which she is being treated as rapidly as was hoped, and may be compelled to submit to another operation and have a piece of bone removed from her face.—Reese River Reveille.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES HELD BY ELKS LODGE

Inscribed; so grandly God-like in its precepts, and yet so sweetly human. For we are the children of error. Our faults are our weaknesses and our weaknesses our mistakes. Therefore, do we write our brothers' faults upon the sands, that they may be washed away by the waters of oblivion, and be remembered no more forever; believing as we do that the qualities of mercy and forgiveness, by some called love or charity, are among those divine attributes whereby the frailties and infirmities of our weak human nature may be brought more nearly to an approximation of the eternal and infinite mind wherein abides all mercy, all justice and all truth. Yes, more; we write our brothers' virtues upon the tablets of love and memory. This is more than charity; it is justice, as well as brotherly love and fidelity.

Thus do we behold four great cardinal principles of sound morality and true religious faith, blent in holy union, indissolubly interwoven in the fabric of that splendid motto which overshadows our order like a veritable canopy of cloth-of-gold fringed by the eternal glory of the stars, in comparison with which all the gem-encrusted diadems of this world must lose their tawdry luster and grow pale.

Moved by these sentiments, and impelled by the sacred obligations of our order, it is the sweet and beautiful custom of those who are thus banded together in the holy ties of charity, justice, brotherly love and fidelity, to assemble at this season and do honor to the memories of those departed brothers who will meet us in the flesh no more. They have gone the way we all must go. You have heard their names read by the secretary of this lodge and they answered not. The Supreme Exalted Ruler of the Universe has called them to a higher forum, and they have obeyed the summons that must come to us all. It is well. It is well. Inscrutable thought they may appear to us, we bow submissively to the dispensation of an all-wise providence.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that the first five names, constituted our roll of dead in the beginning of the lodge up to the end of 1912, and since that time the rest of the names on this list have been added. Among those that have been added this year are the names of Kenneth J. Booth, to whom we owe a large debt of gratitude, for he voluntarily sacrificed his all in the "land of the poppies" in order that you and I might live; and the other is Bro. Olson; while he did not die in battle, yet he contracted tuberculosis while in the service and passed to the great beyond a short time ago.

The service flag of Tonopah lodge drapes the wall over there. You will notice that many were called but only two golden stars selected.

It was hard for us to give them up. It is hard for us, sometimes to understand why our best beloved and most congenial spirits must be taken from among us. This much we know: "There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away." But when the fiat of the Almighty has gone forth, we accept that judgment as the low. When God has spoken, it behooves not man to question why. With our flimsy minds we cannot grapple with the infinite. We do not attempt to do so. For, as we read in the book of Job, "We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days on earth are but a shadow." We know that none of us will be here so very long, and as William Cullen Bryant has reminded us in his immortal poem, "All the millions that tread the globe, are but a handful to those that slumber in its bosom." In the nature of things it cannot be very many years before our own beloved order will have more members slumbering beyond the vale than are left behind to honor the memory of the dead. They are passing, one by one, the old familiar faces. Soon, too soon, we shall go to join these hallowed dead, and the places that know us now will know us no more forever.

Our lips are poor ministers of our hearts on this occasion; they have their paltry limitations; a deep emotion is circled by a meager scope when tethered to the spoken word. The great pool of sorrow stored in the heart's deep well is not reached by the buckets we lower of human speech. It were a profanation of the sweetest flower the soul can brook, could we coin into language and give to common gaze that which only sorrow may see.

As we participate in these solemn services, as we meet in annual session to recall those traits and qualities, incidents and acts, which cling with fragrant tenderness, around the well remembered forms of our departed brothers, the asperities of life are softened and subdued, and we realize as perhaps we have never before fully realized, the deep importance, the imperishable influence, which attaches to our daily acts, our daily conduct, one toward another.

It cannot be that there is no immortality for the good, the brave, the beautiful, the sweet, the true. It cannot be that the hapless backs voyaging over the rough seas here shall not make some sublimer port; that the care-worn, helpless burden bearer here shall not have a roadside rest at last, by the cooling waters and under the branching palms of some land that has banished sorrow. Did we dare assert the thought that life here commences and here ends, the farthest butt of all our sail, it would be renegade to all that endears life, a travesty on creation, a mockery of family affection and a sacrilege to that whisper of God to woman, when of all his jewels, he gave her Motherhood.

Our departed brothers are dead, and yet they live. Over the bridge which spans the abyss between time and eternity, and which rests upon the magic chain of memory, they come back to us, not in grave clothes, or mantles marred with blemish, but purged of imperfections, they return to us in all the grandeur of perfected manhood. All that was noble, all that was beautiful, and all that was inspiring in their lives, comes with them to exert an uplifting influence, and points us to higher ideals of life and living. Instead of yielding to the baser passions of envy, malice and hate.

It remains for us, the living, to so demean ourselves that when the call shall come to us as it came to them, and as it must come to us all, we shall go forth serenely and without faltering, as men who commit themselves to the keeping of an all-wise Guide, Protector and Friend.

And now that our departed brothers have left the shore touched by that mysterious sea that never yet has borne on any wave the image of a homeward sail, may perfect peace be theirs. Wherever they may sleep, wherever they lie dreaming, they are not forgotten, nor have they died in vain. Our order mourns them and enshrines them in its heart of hearts. And the Grand Exalted Ruler of the Universe opens His everlasting gates today and bands down above them in mercy and love; and as gently as the wing of an unseen dove He lets fall upon them His blessing, and His benediction.

And with this light of another world almost beating in our faces today, the faults of our brothers we write upon the sands, and upon the tablets of our memory and our love we write the virtues of these immortal dead.

THE DARMS COAL MINING COMPANY

A Nevada Corporation (Fully Paid and Non-Assessable)

A COMING NEVADA INDUSTRY

The Darms Coal Company owns 160 acres of patented land and 800 acres of land adjoining—subject to patent, near Coaldale, Esmeralda County, Nevada. This land is classified by the United States Land Office as "Coal Land." The first prospecting on the ground was done by sinking an incline shaft on a vein which showed a large outcrop of low-grade coal. At a depth of 200 feet, the coal gave 28 per cent ash, by Government test, and at 280 feet the vein was 21 feet thick and six feet of it gave 16 per cent ash proved to be commercial coal. By crosscutting 40 feet, another vein was cut that showed three feet of good coal.

It was not feasible to mine this coal through the prospect shaft, and in consideration of the improvement in the quality as depths were attained, engineers recommended a new shaft, which has been sunk to a depth of 540 feet. A contract has been let to Fallel & Mulcoy to sink an additional 80 feet, which, according to surveys, would bring the shaft about 30 feet below the big vein.

The contractors are working on the contract now, which calls for its completion within 60 days. The Company is equipped with hoist, compressor, pumps and all accessories needed for mining. This Company has a property which bids fair to be able to supply Southern Nevada with fuel in the near future. A limited amount of Treasury Stock is offered for sale at
